Taxes - The Big Issue in Wisconsin

It must be perfectly clear to everyone now that the big issue in the gubernatorial campaign in Wisconsin is whether or not we shall finance state government by the addition of a general sales tax or by readjusting rates to increase collections under the present progressive income tax.

Philip G. Kuehn, the Republican nominee for governor, stood for a general sales tax in his campaign two years ago and he has not changed his stand since.

John W. Reynolds, the Democratic nominee for governor, has stated that if he is elected governor his principal reliance for additional income will be upon the income tax. Both candidates have made it clear that they stand for the repeal of the present selective sales tax which was proposed by Governor Nelson as a compromise with the Republican controlled legislature at the most recent session.

Before adjusting the income tax rates, Mr. Reynolds would increase the excise taxes on cigarettes and alcoholic beverages to produce the same amount of revenue now being raised by the sales tax on these products. Also, he would impose a 3 per cent excise tax on the net receipts (sales price less trade-in) from the sale of automobiles. These taxes, he says, will produce approximately $30 million per year and an additional $10 million will be raised by the elimination of the deductibility of federal income taxes under Wisconsin individual and corporation income tax laws. This $40 million per year, together with $20 million from normal growth in revenue he says is provided annually by our present price structure, would replace the $60 million per year which will be lost by the repeal of the present selective sales tax. Whatever the additional requirements are can be met by a higher tax on the income of Wisconsin residents, Mr. Reynolds says.

On the other hand, Mr. Kuehn believes that Wisconsin is now raising about all of the revenue it is practical to raise by the income tax, and therefore he proposes no increase there. His principal proposal is the adoption of a general 3 per cent sales tax. There would be very few exemptions under this proposal. A merchant, as Mr. Kuehn explains it, would practically compute his tax by taking three per cent of his total sales. However, low income groups and especially a low income individual with a large family would be protected by rebates either as deductions on income taxes due or as a straight cash refund for those who have no income tax liability.

Mr. Kuehn favors the application of the sales tax to all sales, or practically all sales, with refunds where desirable rather than setting up a great list of exempted items because the latter plan greatly increases the cost of collections and administration.

Mr. Reynolds' stand is that all taxes are paid out of income and that rates and exemptions can be adjusted so that the adoption of a sales tax is unnecessary. He insists that the sales tax is a gimmick used by the wealthy people of the state to place the burden on the poor.

Mr. Kuehn favors the sales tax with appropriate refunds because he said it tends to establish a better climate for business and thus helps to provide jobs for Wisconsin people. He says that the $12 exemption was suggested because some reports have indicated that the average amount spent for food in Wisconsin is $400 per year. Thus the 3 per cent sales tax with a $12 rebate would permit the purchase of $400 worth of food without tax. However, he suggests that it might be possible to get a more accurate figure and thus change the exemptions when the time comes to draft the bill. He favors the sales tax also because he believes it is necessary to eliminate the personal property tax which is a great burden on business and also to lighten the general property tax load on the individual by providing more aid to localities. Mr. Kuehn says that his program is designed to encourage business to expand in Wisconsin and thus increase employment opportunities for Wisconsin people. Mr. Reynolds says that all taxes are paid by people and not by systems and that the fairest distribution of the tax problem is possible under the income tax plan. He acknowledges that businessmen do complain of the tax climate in Wisconsin but justifies his stand by pointing out that the greatest industrial areas of the world, New York and California, have the highest taxes. He has not suggested increasing aids to localities to lift the burden of the property tax because he believes that at least some of the local tax money is being wastefully and improperly spent and that this should not be further encouraged by gifts from the state.

This analysis is based upon the opening statements of the two candidates and it is certain that these statements will be elaborated and expanded farther as the campaign progresses. But it is the great good fortune of the Wisconsin people that they have two candidates, one on each side of this faxation question which has been avoided assiduously by candidates in the past, with the result that there has been no final solution. Wisconsin people have an opportunity now to learn the story and to decide this very vital matter in their own interests at the November election.

Britain and the Common Market

The reserved announcement from the United Kingdom and members of the British Commonwealth of Nations that they have given a qualified approval to England's joining the European Economic Community indicates that eventually the controversies will be cleared up. But the long, closed door meetings apparently revealed considerable opposition among Commonwealth delegates to the plan. Unfortunately for their point of view there is very little alternative that has much chance of economic success.

Since the end of the Empire, the Commonwealth plan has implemented the old mercantile theory by trade advantages among members. This has been of great importance to the members. New Zealand for instance, exports 57 per cent of all exports to England. Other nations import and export between a fifth and a third of their products to and from Britain. Of course there have been tariff free agreements as well as assured markets for agricultural products at a reasonably high market price.

But the Commonwealth nations fear that, if England joins the Common Market. European nations will be picking up these trade advantages. To some extent these worries have validity. But the Commonwealth can have no sound basis if England continues to slip economically. And, as the Common Market grows in strength, England, outside, is bound to suffer.

There are both economic and political reasons why the Commonwealth delegates have registered disapproval. Apparently the political ones really have the most influence but can also be counted upon to dissipate more easily once the delegates

The African nations are complaining about new ties to colonialism mostly for local consumption. At any rate, after the long sessions, there was at least the announcement of some agree-

But it was disappointing that Commonwealth members seemed to reject the idea of association membership in the Common Market. This type of concession from the European nations had been won after long. hard arbitration by England. It would provide that associate members in Africa and the Caribbean could send their agricultural products into the Common Market duty free but still retain protective tariffs at home for their developing industries. The African nations in particular should take a long hard look at their own economic dependence and political instability and try to get rid of the old colonialism refrain.

There is another important reason why it is important that England join the Common Market soon. The economic ties in Europe are almost certain to develop into political ties. A united Europe-or at least Western Europe—is no longer a vague idealistic vision. And in that political planning it would be well for England to be in on the ground floor.

Presumably the objections and disapprovals will be overcome since there is really no other intelligent course for England and the Commonwealth. And the increasingly strong Common Market will be something else to contend with for the

Our public school children are not receiving the broad, unbiased education that is claimed. How can they learn history without learning the causes for some of the events? An education which has had all mention of God purged from it is planned ignorance. Religion may be defined as Man relationship to God, whether it be positive or negative. I submit that when the public schools begin to look askance at the words "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance, when they are afraid to read the 23rd Psalm or the Ten Commandments, they are not only actively teaching sectarian religion, they are teaching the dogma and doctrines of Atheism.

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE TO VOTERS IN OUTAGAMIE COUNTY

ELDEN J. BROEHM ANNOUNCES WITHDRAWAL FROM SHERIFF'S RACE

Elden J. Broehm, Appleton City Clerk for the past seven years, had intended to seek the office of sheriff on the Independent Ticket. In an official announcement today, Mr. Broehm declared his party meant more to him than his personal ambitions and that he would withdraw from the contest in the interest of party unity. A copy of his statement appears below:

! believe in good government and the idea behind the two party system of government and om an active working Republican. I have, after careful and soul searching consideration, decided to withdraw my candidacy as an Independent Republican for the office of Sheriff of Outagamie County.

Because of the enthusiasm of my many supporters and workers this has been a hard decision. For their untiring work in my behalf I can only say "Thanks a million", their efforts will never be forgotten.

To the circulators and 1500 plus voters who have signed my nomination papers as an Independent Republican candidate again, I wish to say "thanks" for continued support.

To my many Independent and Democratic friends and supporters also my thanks. I realize especially in county politics that friendships often transcend party lines.

It is my belief that if we are to maintain our Republican form of government, party responsibility must come before personal ambitions - therefore I have made this decision.

May I urge my many faithful workers and friends to join me in the support of all national, state and county Republican candidates.

Yours for Responsible Government,

Elden J. Broehm

The Republican Party of Outagamie County wishes to express Its deep appreciation to Elden J. Broehm for placing his party ahead of his own personal aspirations. It is through the actions of dedicated men like Elden J. Brochm that the Republican Party throughout the nation remaigs an active force for good government.

'Harvest Hop' Theme of Kaukauna Cabaret Club's Dinner Dance

The autumn season provided the theme for the Kaukauna Cabaret Club's 'Harvest Hop' Saturday evening at Van Abel's Restaurant, Hollandtown.

A cocktail hour at 6:30 p.m. preceded the dinner. The dance, a semi-formal affair, began at 9 p.m.

Corn stalks, fall flowers and name tags in the form of brilliantly colored leaves carried out the party theme.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rennicke may be wondering where the summer fall decorations at Van Abel's Restaurant Saturparty-goers who enjoyed formal dinner dance. (Post-Crescent Photos)

Laws Proposed For City Hall Parking Lot

City Planner Says Misuse Warrants Local Ordinance

The parking lot adjacent to the city hall building should be put under local ordinance so the city can enforce regulations that will be drawn up to govern it.

Rasmussen has prepared an extensive report concerning future use and policy for the lot. His recommendation is that it be used for municipal employee parking. He also suggested other alterna-
